WEATHER OF CONCERN

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

- Monsoonal moisture will bring several chances for showers and thunderstorms to the mountains of interior Northern California.
- Rainfall may be limited in some storms, but relative humidity recoveries are expected to moderate to good each day.
- Friday, we'll return to dry weather and mostly sunny skies as weak high pressure sets up over the region. Another trough is forecast for the weekend, which will decrease temperatures and potentially bring another chance for mountain storms on Sunday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

- Slight chance of afternoon thunderstorms over the mountain and deserts today through Thursday with threat of flash flooding.
- Any thunderstorms that develop will be capable of producing heavy rain, occasional cloud to ground lightning, and flash flooding.
- Despite the potential for heavy rain, there may be lightning strikes on the periphery of any storms which could trigger fire ignitions.
- Gusty and erratic downdraft winds could result in the quick spread of any fire ignitions.

- Excessive heat will affect parts of southeast California on Wednesday before conditions turn slightly cooler by Thursday.
- Scattered thunderstorms are possible across the southern California mountains, as well as the central Sierra Mountains through Thursday.
- Elevated fire weather concerns will continue through Thursday across the inland portions of Southern Region due to warm temperatures, locally breezy conditions, and a chance of thunderstorms.

Friday-Monday

- A cooling trend will continue heading into the weekend.
- Drier air will move into the state for the end of the week, significantly reducing or eliminating the threat of thunderstorms for the weekend.
